Just like real life, the world isn't fair, and there isn't always a good ending. But it is these faults in our world that makes us appreciate more of the goods in our world.

I haven't unlock all the endings yet, but I am almost done. The game is rather short and will take you about 3-4 hours max if you skip the parts you've read before and make different choices to go for different endings.

Overall, not a bad game. Just a little short. It would be better if it was longer.. >Born

>Mother ditches me in town center

>Cry for help

>Great Uncle comes to my rescue with berries

>Uncle picks me up, smiling down upon me

>Me, "dad?"

>He carries me through town, i take in the sights and people

>Reach the outskirts of town

>He sets me down with that same comforting smile, and feeds me another berry

>Uncle reaches in backpack

>Me, "mmmm more berries"

>Uncles smile fades as he pulls out a knife

>We both know what must be done

>Uncle, "shhhhhhhhhh....sleep now"

>Die a slow death while Uncle mourns the loss of family and potential

11V10 would be begrudgingly euthanized by my Great Uncle for the well being of the town again. Oh My Gosh - Loved the waterpark episode and now cant wait to see Holly dress max up <3

Not sure what to think of the new game but i will keep my mind open because I would prefer to play it before I judge to much. Figurines of all the characters from all three games seems a super cool Idea and I would deffinetly collect them and it would hopefully bring you funding for more episodes.

KYAAAAAAAA!!!!!!

Really want to donate 3000AU but I am not rich I can barely afford the first one being trans and all I am so worried about not having enough to be myself and cover cost of everything. :(wanted to appear in this game and even more so Really want to buy figurine's of all characters from all games Lached has done. <3 <3 If I was rich I would deffinetly donate 3000AU.

Guess I should get a job but its hard.

Please Please Please make a store to help fund you while making things affordable to us. I can see it now a shelf with all the characters on and two large posters on my wall removing all my other ones and keeping just your's up. No I am not holly xd but I guess you could say we have similerarities.. Actually a really fun little game. For $2.50 it's really worth it. I would've spent the whole amount on this game but I got it on sale.

There's enough upgrading to keep it interesting so far. It's like tower defense, where you're invaded by zombies each night and then during the day, you farm to make money. Sell your crops and buy more seeds, or turrets, UZIs or cows, makes perfect sense.. Surprisingly fun. Sort of like Indianna Jones meets Cube meets Bejewelled.. I have tried a few baseball games over the past few years, and none of them can be actually titled a good baseball game. The only option available out there was OOTP, which isn't really my thing.

A good experience I remember having was back in 2007-2008, when Ultimate Baseball Online (aka Real Baseball Online) was around, which then became inaccessible. Different attempts to bring it back by other parties also didn't go well.

Then I saw this game. I didn't expect much from it by simply looking at the pictures. Yet I gave it a try and playing the game is a whole different story. It's "arcadey" and all but has everything covered.

I am not really that versed with rules of baseball, and can't really say what the game misses, therefore I think it's a nice game that anyone can pick up, even without having prior experience\knowledge about baseball as a sport.

Apart from being able to play a full baseball game, the game also offers ability for players to assign their team members with new skills and traits that can be applied in a game. Those skills are gained at the end of games based on performance which is calculated with points.

Players also have the freedom to set the difficulty of games using "ego" which decides how much control a player needs to put on the team members. The higher the "ego" the more attention a player needs to put into controls and depend less on the AI aspect.

In addition to that, the customisation of team members in terms of looks is also possible. It has a wide variety of funny looking faces and hair styles that don't really reduce the game quality but instead add to it a fun and less serious atmosphere. Don't let this stop you from enjoying the game.

Not to forget the funny remarks that the umpire throws in his voice.

So it doesn't matter if you're a baseball fan or simply wanting to start getting into the game, then this game isn't a bad choice.

I can't say that I would recommend the game in its current state - at least for solo play, which honestly just got boring in the first few minutes.

That said - I played for a bit over an hour with a friend, with online multiplayer, and we had fun with it for about that long. There's not really much to the game, and I wouldn't say that it's balanced, or difficult, but I'm not sure that it's trying to be anything other than a casual tower defense game.

It's clunky, but there's clearly some love there, and some real effort has been put into it.

There's some opportunity to mess with the other players, which lets you build your own fun using this as a platform to do so.

Might be worth picking up on sale if you want to get it now, but even at the full $5 price tag, if you get a couple of hours of enjoyment out of it, it's still cheaper than going out to see a movie.

So - still can't really recommend it, but if you've got a few extra bucks laying around, and a friend or two to play with, give it a try.. Very funny and very clever writing. A few glitches noticed on the Brad plot line (Holly delivers your costumes, knows that you are dating, then acts all freaked out at the anime con and asks when we started dating) but still really fun. Can't wait to see more.. A solid Visual Novel experience with gorgeous art and a interesting story. Well worth the purchase. would be great if it didnt crash every time i open it before it gets through the logos. Games online is dead and is also very poorly made. Get Ruse instead.. A Light in The Dark is a visual novel not content to just tell you a story, but instead actively puts you in the shoes of the protagonist and makes you make the tough decisions as if you were there. On the spectrum of visual novel gameplay and interactivity this one definitely has more than most visual novels. Choices are frequent, almost always feel important and are structured in a way that often gives you the feeling of having to make split second decisions on the fly. There are also elements of interactivity beyond just standard visual novel choices.

With regards to the story, it's a compelling and intriguing premise that I believe the game does justice. It's a story with themes relevant to today's society that's well told and features a cast of complex, relatable characters.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XTIuQq3QUjE>. This game does exactly what it should and also is adorable.. I was given a choice of wasting more money on CS:GO skins or supporting the future of a 7-year old programmer. Glad I picked up this game. Can't wait to see what Penny creates next!. Diamond Dan is a puzzle platformer based more on quick reflexes than logic. You must descend towers of ever-shifting blocks to find a map at the bottom and escape. Sounds simple, but you can be crushed or thrown from the tower, and many of the blocks contain traps such as water or spike pits, projectiles, or enemies living inside the walls who will pull you to your death. Checkpoints are created by opening shortcuts with keys.

Traps can be triggered without harming yourself, if you do it quickly, and doing so rewards you by increasing your multiplier, which adds to the value of any treasure you pick up. Your score at the end of the level is then multiplied based on the difficulty you're playing on. Difficulty affects density of traps and how quickly the blocks shift (it can get insane) and can be changed at will for any level.

You can play as Dan (pushes blocks) or Ann (shatters blocks) on any level and there are separate leaderboards for each. Friend and global leaderboards and tons of achievements.
