Victoria. Juicio de la Muerte. La Hipodicea.Q: How to have QFile object's path persist for next invocation? I want to make a module where I can have an object (e.g. QFile) and whenever I get a filepath from the user, I can do things with it, instead of just simply using the path without doing anything. I've written something like this: QFile file("file"); if (file.exists()) return false; //user is trying to use this class without proper permissions, so it fails file.open(QIODevice::ReadOnly); const auto data = file.readAll(); return!data.isEmpty(); The problem is that whenever I call something like this, it returns a fresh QFile object and doesn't persist/reference/know what the original value was. (At least that's the problem I think...) I could use slots and signals, but the problem with those is that they only do something when you call them. I wonder how I can make the return value persist (or make the actual QFile object recognize that I called a method on it?) so that I can save the file (or check) in the next invocation? I'm new to this language so I might have a fundamental misunderstanding, please correct me if so. A: Use QSettings. The current approach is also not good because it assumes that the user has write permissions to the file. Instead of that, write the file as the user, and read it in to the application. This might be the right approach. For example, the following is a class that saves the contents of the file in the document directory. QSettings settings; settings.beginGroup("application_settings"); settings.setValue("author", "Ilya"); settings.setValue("title", "Documentation"); settings.setValue("date_added", QDateTime::currentDateTimeUtc()); settings.endGroup(); And then, the following is a class that reads the data from the file
