anastomosis should be performed with the surgeon's aim in mind to guarantee an anastomosis of adequate quality. The important criteria for an adequate anastomosis are: the absence of tension at the anastomosis and the ability to suture at the floor of the pelvis. Anastomosis of the rectum with the stapling technique is mandatory. Complete mesorectal excision is not mandatory in the resection of locally advanced tumors. However, in the case of tumors extending into the lateral pelvis and where infiltration of the internal iliac vessels or malignant peritoneal implants is evident, the operation should be altered to abdominoperineal resection in order to obtain a better chance of sphincter preservation. In all other cases, abdominoperineal resection should be associated with a defunctioning colostomy. In patients with a tumor that is probably too advanced for complete resection, abdominoperineal resection, with or without colostomy, or total proctectomy may be considered as alternative surgical options.

Visiting the Bay Area During the Great Recession

If you are planning a visit to the Bay Area during the economic downturn, take a moment to consider whether you will be affected. The Bay Area's economy has generally been in good shape over the past few years. In contrast, it is probably fair to say that the entire nation is in a recession now. On our Peninsula, real estate is down, retailers have
